“Frances and I had a monthly routine: she would roll up to the table where I'd set up my bookmobile laptop and say, "Got anything for me?" And I'd almost always reply, "Well, Frances, you know I do," and she'd smile a little smile and nod, and I'd add, "But you should really look in that box over there, because I think you're going to find some other books you're really going to love." Her reading tastes were as varied as could be, but she was especially fond of well-written westerns. Frances was one-of-a-kind-- one of those patrons that has kept my job fresh, fun, and rewarding for many years. I'll miss her dry humor, her plucky spirit, and her voracious appetite for good stories. Happy trails until we meet again, lady.
