“ My Dad was a really cool guy. He knew something about everything. He was always tinkering with stuff and had a ton of great ideas. He was kinda an inventor :) He was also good at fixing cars and building things. He made me and my sisters an octagonal play house when we were kids lol...And we had the coolest swing set on the block. He sometimes would start projects and not finish them.. I do that too, and so did Da Vinci, so maybe we're geniuses.

I feel like Dad had a tough life. He was definitely dealt a bad hand on more than one occasion, but he kept going. He wasn't one to ask for help, he wasn't a drinker or a smoker and he hated drugs. He just kept it to himself and dealt with it.

Dad was a very private guy. He was old school, never been on social media, didn't own a smart phone, didn't answer his land line most the time and his tv still had bunny ears. He liked to keep it simple 😊

He was always giving me things from his work like mugs, and gift cards and butter ball vouchers or his giant jar of change lol And he really liked that jar. He had a great sense of humor and an even better laugh that I'm gonna miss hearing.

I'm gonna miss visiting him. And stealing his lawn mower. I'll miss watching westerns with him. I'll miss our politic-ing... We could fix the worlds problems in about an hour.

...I'm just really gonna miss him. He left too soon. This all happened so out of nowhere, I just feel like he had so much more life left to live.

I'm so grateful for the time and the memories I had with him. I'm so grateful for the hugs and "I love you"s I got in. I know he's in a better place now. He believed in Jesus Christ and had his last rights so I know that he will be ok and I'll see him again.

“ JD was a fantastic coworker and friend. I have been working with him for six years and at first he was very standoffish and then as time went by we developed a special relationship. Every morning he and I would sit in the break room and have coffee and talk about politics or ice Road truckers or duck dynasty. He was always so very kind and he will be sorely missed. Please know that your dad was a very very special person.
