“ I remember the Drucks getting together on Fridays after work at Roques Cafe on Wilson Ave. They would go to the rathskeller, [basement], drink beer, shoot pool and play pinball, they paid off on pinball back then. Their favorite joke was to act like there was a dog under the table, they would get everybody looking for the imaginary dog. With our age difference, I always thought the he was my uncle, then I found out that my dad was 39 when I was born. I guess him and Betty are finally, together forever.
