“ John Beverly Thompson had three children who never helped another person. Beth stole everything. Michael looked for things to steal. Nathan could not find a job and joined the military. His wife's sister Robin would just say, "Peg," which was enough for everyone. John Beverly Thompson did help other people, but his wife Peg struggled with daily tasks and not eating lots of salad instead of cake and cookies. In the end of their later years, the three kids did not take care of John and Peg. But if Michael died, then where is his obituary. The beginnings of potential nice people can be stopped at the crossroads of people like Peg who struggle and shout about dishes not washes, garbage not taken out from the kitchen, house not cleaned. Peg wanted a dishwasher but would not install a dishwasher inside the kitchen cabinets. Peg would would roll a portable dishwasher from the wall in the tiny kitchen to the kitchen sink to snap the water hose onto the facet on the kitchen sink. Peg could have moved the dishes around inside the kitchen cabinets for enough space to install a dishwasher inside the kitchen cabinets, but that was too much of a problem for Peg. Peg's sister Robin moved into many houses that Robin and Robby bought throughout the years. Peg really did not like to help other people. Beth was a complaining person too. The whole family had problems. Peggy's shouting about everything could have been an early system of dementia. Hopefully, there will be new drugs to stop the onset of dementia so families can live happy lives.
