“ It is difficult to say goodbye for now to my younger brother. He was like a son to me. He fought a long hard battle with cancer and prevailed for several years. His family has always been his first priority. May he rest In peace. We will be together again.

“ Cheryl and family I am so sorry for your loss. What a fighter he was. He had so much willpower to hang on and all the treatments and pain he went through what a hero. He can rest now in the arms of the Lord and be pain free. May God wrap His arms around you and your family and bless you all during this difficult sad times. Love you and call me if you ever want to talk. 🥺❤️

“ They do not make men with bigger hearts, and sometimes bigger mouths than my good friend Kenny. 😬 and I mean that very respectfully. Doctors only gave him six months to live when he was diagnosed with cancer. He held on for over seven years because of his love for his family. I know this because he told it to me daily. Just know now that he is no longer in pain & is once again running wild as he did before this horrible diagnosis. Well, some days he still did get to run wild even with his diagnosis!! Just ask his sister-in-law when he showed up in her backyard late at night surprising everyone. He swore to me he was just doing what she had asked him to do a year or two before. Who would have thought??? I will see you in my dreams and catch you on the flipside brother. Until then you will be missed and I will help your family in anyway I can. Tell Tinker Bell to keep you company until I can get there to annoy you once again.

“ Sure going to miss you Kenny 😭 You would do what you could to help someone out if they needed. You're at peace and out of pain and you rest in God's arms now ❤️ I know we will see you again. I'm sure you're with your mom dad brother and sister! Tell Jim hi! I'm so sorry for Cheryl, Sydney, Alayna and Michelle and Jean and Sandy. Sending love hugs and prayers to comfort you all. I'm here for you all ❤️ 🙏🙏🙏

“ Ken lived an honorable life. I remember now and then, we’d go out and every once in a while, somebody would say hello to Ken, and I would tilt my head forward, looking at him from the side with a curious smile, wondering who Ken was.. I’ve understood that he was a man with many stories — only he’d never mentioned them. Ken was the person who would save a hundred people from a burning building and would find himself the humility to never mention it. I met Ken during his retirement, but I’m sure that me and Ken would’ve been best friends in one of his many stories in his life if circumstances were different — just like the many people who’d say hi to Ken in the most unusual places.

Ken embodied resilience. He’d tell me that he wanted to do everything together before he became ill, a sentiment I didn’t grasp at the time. Age nor sickness phased him. If there was something Ken and I both shared, it’s that our stubbornness knew no bounds. So I wasn’t surprised when I heard he defied his doctor’s prognosis yet again, not knowing that it was his last time fighting death. Reality had set in after hours of denial until I accepted it with a heavy heart. Memories of Ken flooded my thoughts, and I mourned the things I cherished about him that I would never witness again—his peculiar yet perfect timing, his culinary skills, and his witty sense of humor.

But what I loved about Ken most of all was that he loved everybody, and in turn, everybody loved Ken. And although Ken may not be here today, his love will remain in our hearts. And we must honor and respect Ken by showing the kindness he once showed in the same way he lived.

“ I have so many wonderful memories in the 20 something years we have lived next door. They were not just neighbors but family. Words can not explain the sorrow I feel for Cheryl, Michelle, and Sydney. Kenny is such an amazing guy. I know he is with Dalto. now sitting and catching up talking about cars. So many wonderful memories. My heart and prayer go out to u guys at this very hard time. . Love you all Tenah Callison

“ My dad Kenneth Meyer loved the outdoors, his loving family and pets. He loved outdoors and planting flowers and golf course greens for the Louisville Metro Parks.

Sydney Meyer - November 15, 2023 at 05:11 PM

The flowers he planted all over the city of Louisville will continue to flourish many Years to come.
