“ I am really lost for words for what has happened because even though I knew that Bill was in bad shape I never thought he would be gone from this world so soon. My husband was a formal student of Bill's at Ivy Tech. But it became more than that after a while because he became a good friend to us both. I remember he would call the house and we would talk for hours and that was even before we actual got to meet. My husband and Bill got very close while he was attending class and we just happened to click too when he would call for my husband. At first we would talk about computers but it became more than that. He once told me that he thought I was very intelligent about many things in life. To me that was the greatest compliment coming from a man that was extremely intelligent in just about anything. I became to value Bill's opinion about many things. He and I became very familiar with one anothers lives and we confided in each other. He had a way about him that made things not seem so bad. Even though he had many health problems he would always have time to talk to me about my problems and he would pray with me that things would be better. We lost touch the last couple of years but I never once forgot about him. My husband and I are not together any longer but his friendship remained close with Bill and he would let me know how Bill was doing. I had decided just recently that my son and I would go visit Bill one day but now that won't be possible. Which goes to show... that you should never put off doing things that you want to do. We just never know what is going to happen to us or the people we care about.

My thoughts and prayers go out to his family...I never met Judy but I did meet Billy. Bill loved his family and friends. And I know that Bill will never be forgotten. He will always be a part of my thoughts and be apart of my heart. Throughout our lifetime we meet a lot of people that become very dear to us which is true for me. I have to say that Bill DeAngelo was very special and such a dear friend to me. I keep remembering that one time we went to eat at Eastern House and he ate all those crab legs...he had shells going everywhere. I have talked about that so many times. That was a fun time. And that is what I want to remember about Bill. That time made me smile. And I know that is what Bill would have wanted. He would want everyone that knew him to remember the good times. All his suffering is over and he is in a much better place. But for us his family and friends we will miss him dearly.

He was just a truly special man and I am so glad that I am able to call him a friend. May you rest in peace my dear friend.
